

City of Leeds

Contributed by Administrator
Tuesday, 25 December 2007
Last Updated Monday, 31 December 2007

Visiting the City of Leeds

Located in the River Aire in West Yorkshire, England, the city of Leeds is a city with colors that transcends passion and prosperity. Linked extensively via railways, roads, air, and cyberspace, it makes Leeds not just an ordinary place for tourist. The unique combination of business environment in a tourist destination makes the city of Leeds one great place to visit, work and live.

The City Landscape

The secret of Leeds's success partly lies in its geographical location. Leeds provides easy access for Scottish into the heart of England. A Londoner can trade with Scottish people by going through Leeds by road or by plane to other big cities like Liverpool, Birmingham, Nottingham, and Manchester. Major motorways like M1 and M62 motorways induce transports near and in the city. Cheap fares, thanks to subsidies given by West Yorkshire, encourage widespread use of public transport in and around its capital. Air transport system and railways are well established. Internet server farms also thrive within its boundaries.

The city of Leeds is not just any ordinary business and financial district. It is a city that boasts diversity of people, places, and institutions. Along with the bustling business environment, Leeds serves as a home for universities, museums, art galleries, parks, retail centers, and industrial parks. This makes the city earn not only in the form of investments but also in tourism and education.

Tourism and Business

Welding leisure and business realms in the city, Leeds has a lot to offer when it comes to doing business in a very conducive environment. Restaurants, bars, museums, parks, art galleries, scenic places, and walking paths can be found all over the city. Cultural, sports, and musical events happen on a regular basis. With some 1,000 shops that offer the most diverse product and service range, shopping can never be bigger. Leeds also wins awards for being one of the most tourist-friendly cities in the region.

Business is never better in Leeds. Leeds is one of the fastest-growing and most successful cities in Europe. Leeds has the largest retail centers in the region, employing some 15,000 people and supporting some 4,000 associated services employment. It offers a mix of department stores, shopping centers and high-end boutiques that can cater to all pocket sizes and preferences. Leeds is also a home for 30 domestic and international banks, the Europe's third largest manufacturing center and two internationally acclaimed universities.